1 It's All About You

A private tour is run exclusively for you and your partner, families or friends, so you are not travelling with strangers. You can choose your own departure date, length of tour and grade of comfort.

This means you can choose to spend your travel budget how you wish, from very basic to luxury hotels, guided excursions or freedom days, include meals or enjoy exploring the local restaurant scene independently. It is all about you and those you are travelling with.

"We are so glad we took a customised tour, we had the best of both worlds, all the hassle was taken out of the arrangements but we had freedom and independence to go shopping or explore on our own"

Irene Schrieber is one of Fine Travel's key boutique Tour Organisers for travel to Asia.

Travelling independently may mean you spend much of your holiday researching, dealing with touts, travelling on overcrowded and unsafe transport, spending too much of your holiday trying to find a place to stay and getting lost.

Planning by those 'In the Know'

"Our guide was amazing; she had such a passion for the Vietnamese culture and was so good at discreetly schooling us in local customs so we didn't offend. She picked up quickly on our interests and whisked us off down an alley we would never have found, to see a home industry silk loom at work."

On a customised tour all the planning is done with and for you. You will travel in comfortable air-conditioned vehicles, stay in well researched accommodation of a grade that suits your budget and have the service of a professional friendly guide on all your excursions.

4 Flexibility

You don't have to share the attentions of the guide with a large tour group and you have the flexibility of stopping the vehicle (if safe to do so of course) when you see a photo opportunity or need a coffee or bathroom. You are not waiting on a bus full of people to load and unload which can greatly impinge on your tour day.

"We were driving along this remote country road in India with our driver/guide when we saw a local band leading a wedding group; we stopped to take photos and were invited to join them. We missed out on a couple of minor stops but four hours being treated as honoured guests at a local wedding was well worth it."

5 Unique

There's no such thing as a 'typical' private group – private tours cater for all kinds of groups. Couples, friends, families, sports groups, culinary groups, birdwatchers, photographers, golfers, cycling and hiking groups, diplomats, an old soldier looking for his brother lost during the Vietnam war and even the sound crew from King Kong.

Fine Tip for Planning a Private Tour

Tell the Fine Travel Consultant how many people are in your group, the destination(s), the length of time you wish to travel, the standard of accommodation you require, your group's abilities, their interests and how much freedom you want. Use some of the tour suggestions on travel websites as they highlight the 'Must dos' in each area.

Then sit back, relax and let us design a holiday experience just for you.

Although a private tour can include whatever tour elements you'd like, we do offer popular tour itineraries to inspire you and help you begin to plan your holiday.
